It was my good fortune to get a fortnight's holiday at the end of last year from the monotonous round of tea growing, and in company with another planter I determined to see all I could of to spend at our destination and it was the have well employed a month's research. The buried cities are three in number, if The buried cities are three in number, if one includes the rock fortress of Sigiri; Anuradhapura and Poionnaruwa are more exactly described as cities. Our time being a stupendous building of solid brickwork. so short, my companion and I determined to confine ourselves chiefly to Anuradha-pura, named after and founded by one of the earliest Sinhalese nobles, Prince An-radha, 504 B.C. It is situated in the center of the North Central province, in a district covered with the remains of palaces, shrines, works, all bearing witness to the greatness and power of the earliest Sinhalese mon-archy. The greatest of these tanks, named Kalawewa, is a gigantic reservoir of about 6,000 acres, 20 feet wide at the top and 60

One often meets a gang of some fifty or sixty of these coolies—men, women and children—each with a little bun-dle containing the household goods and en-tire possessions of its bearer. They are atpared with the penny, the full earnings of their own country. The Great North road stretches like a long white tape over the plain, and runs for miles through dense where the coach changes horses and at a ways sleep and find food and shelter. A few acres of paddy fields surround each vil-lage, half-flooded, malarial marshes, where all the rice the villagers require to supply their wants is raised. It is a long, monotonous road, starting at the terminus of the railway at Matale, and running due north for seventy miles till it reaches Anuradha-

As we advance the cultivated lands of dense jungle is on every side of us. Habitations become scarce as we approach Dambulla, which may be called the halfway house, where there are exceedingly interesting rock temples, dating from the first century B. C. The ascent to these temples is made by a steep staircase cut in the rock. The temples are a series of five natural caverns, entered from a ledge neath lie the rice fields granted by ancient and there is a strange mixture of Brah-man and Buddhist images and pictures. Creatures of the Jungle.

there, wild creatures-mongoose, bandicoot, etc.—darf across the path; but the network of creepers with which the trees are bound together forbids pursuit, save where elephants have cleared the way.

The earliest authentic records of Anuradhapura date back to the year 437 B.C., a time when Britain was still unknown to her Roman conquerors, when our forefathers, stained with woad, still practiced the mystic rites of Druidical worship. When England was still sunk in barbarism this fair city of the east was at the height of its glory; her vast walls surround an area of 250 square miles, thousands of priests thronged the courts of her temples, which rivaled in magnificence the richness and glory of the great Temple of Solomon. Solemn processions, headed by the king, who was surrounded by a sulte of magnificently equipped courtiers, filled her streets. Her embassies journeyed to distant Rome, and her buildings and statues rivaled those of ancient Greece in size and beauty of design.

bar invaders from southern India, who, with the Tamils, overran the land, ruthlessly destroying palace and temple, with every treasure of art and beauty. Where the proudest city of the east shone in wealth and splendor and worshiped with a glorious ritual there are now only mighty ruins, the fallen figures of giants and the overpowering vegetation of the jungle cov-ering all things. Efforts are however, now being made to bring to light many of the wonderful buildings which now is buried. The government of Ceylon is excavating and gradually clearing, and the King of Siam, who is the chief royal Buddhist in the world, is having buildings repaired at his own expanse. his own expense. The beauty of this restoration is that there can be no modern additions; a support here, a little cement there, is all that can be attempted, while one hopes much for more excavation. It is estimated that there is enough work in sight for the next twenty years and enough for the next twenty centuries hidden in the jungle!

The Sacred Bo Tree. One of the most interesting relics at Anuradhapura is the famous sacred bo tree, without doubt the oldest tree in the world of which we can ascertain the exact age. We know from the Sinhalese chronicles that it was planted in the year 288 B.C., and is therefore 2.188 years old, and is a Gotoma attained Buddhahood,

It was brought to Ceylon by Sanghamitta, sister of Mahinda, who had preached the new religion of Buddha in the island about the year 307 B. C., and through whom King Tissa, his queen, courtiers and at last his people were converted. Wonderful legends have been left by the native histo-rians of the transit and reception in Ceylon of the sacred branch. It seems that no one would dare to lop the sacred parent tree, and that the difficulty was solved by a priest, who was inspired to draw a line round a branch with a golden pencil, when the branch immediately severed itself, and was brought with great honor and much ceremony to Ceylon. Such a hold has this legend over the mind of the Buddhist today that no pilgrim will dare to gather a leaf from the tree, but will, with the greatest veneration, pick up those which lie on the ground, and treasure them for the rest of his life as his most sacred possession. The tree stands in a grove about eighty feet square, an around it are several shrines, at which offerings, chiefly of flowers and candidate are made. candles, are made, a is approached by three tiers of terraces, the steps of which have some finely carved moonstones, and the pedestals are covered with gigantic figures of animals.

The Isurumuniya temple, carved out of the natural rock, has a splendid position, though the modern entrance, with its tiled roof, gives one rather a shock. Before it and behind it lie large lotus pends, inhab-ited by sacred crocodiles. The terraces which lead to the shrine are covered with frescoes and sculptures in bas-rellef. The natural rock itself is frescoed in high relief, and beautiful carving abounds every-

One of the most interesting tempies is called Loha Pasada, the brazen palace. It was built by Dutthagamini, a successor of King Tissa, for a community of Buddhist monks. The sixteen hundred monolithic columns of granite, on which it rested, are all that now remain. The college is said to have contained 1,000 dormitories and to have been 232 feet square. All the pillars were covered with burnished brass and or-namented with precious stones, the build-The buried cities of Ceylon, being far removed from the centers which usually attract passengers calling at Colombo, are not so well known, or so often visited, as their interest and antiquity demand that can see the marks of the wedges used in quarrying the granite.

> Many Hidden Treasures. The jungle around Anuradhapura hides, no doubt, many a treasure in its leafy depths. We, of course, in our limited stay, these marvelous ruins. We had but a week | could only see those which were easiest of access. One day we visited four huge rainy season, so our camera was not of so dagobas, one of which was 405 feet high much use as it might have been, and those short six days showed us that we were short six days showed us that we were obliged to pass over wonders which could victory, another is the shrine for a hair from the eyelash of Buddha, a third a vast galleries, courts, platforms supported by hundreds of carved elephants, some to light, with altar slabs, scrolls, tablets, elephants' heads, great statues of Buddha and kings. One of these is said to be King Dutthagamini; it is sculptured in dolomite, and the folds of the robe are especially beautiful. The pupils of the eyes were probably once jewels, for they are holes now. Another statue in dolomite repre-sents Patiyatissa I, who came to the throne B. C. 19. It is eight feet high, much weather-worn and broken.

In the heart of the forest we came upon another colossal figure, that of the scated Buddha, a monolith eight feet high, which has probably been where we saw it for a thousand years. It stands upon three pilquite black. The hands, like those of all the seated Buddhas, are, as usual, placed in the lap, the back of the right hand rest-ing on the left palm. The crossed feet are carved in an impossible position, intended to show the magal lakunu, or sacred marks on the soles.

It is, of course, impossible to investigate Anuradhapura thoroughly in so short a time as my companion and I had at our disposal. I was due at my new billet in a few days' time, and the ruins cover a wide extent. On all sides are vast dagobas, sur-rounded by shrines and stonework of great beauty, and often in excellent preservation The ruins of numberless temples, guard the fullis of numberiess temples, guard houses and priests' quarters, piliars with finely molded capitals and massive stones, figures of gods and kings, of elephants and liens, horses and oxen, stand out prominently on every side. Large and handsome "pckunas," or bathing places, with three or four tiers of massive stonework leading down to them, remind one that the ancient Sinhalese valued cleanliness as much as godliness. "How are the mighty fallen" was in one's mind all the time.

At the present day Anuradhapura is a fair-sized town, as Ceylon towns go. It is the headquarters of the government agent of the north central province. There is plenty of big game—leopard, bear, sambur, etc.—a good rest house, a goal and telegraph station, and within a few years there will be a railway station, for Anuradhapura has the misfortune, archaeologically speak-ing, to be one of the most important places on the new line connecting the Jaffna peninsula with the rest of the Island. Its pres-ent inhabitants-formerly there were 200,000 -are not many, and a few yellow-robed priests still keep up some of the ancient

A tug lay hard by, and the captain added his bit to my sociological nocturne, as 1 the water, where red lights and green wharves and ships. "Where do you sleep?" questioned I. "Why, here," he replied, "in this very pilot house, on that nice fluffy bunk you're a-settin' on; an' sometimes I sleep at that wheel, a-steerin' this boat, sir. Can't be helped, sir. The hours we work would stave in a trained nurse an' send a sentinel to be shot. Why, man, I've send a sentinel to be shot. Why, man, I've seed the time when I've stuck by that wheel twenty grim hours at a stretch; once it was forty-two hours. And when you read in the paper about towin' a big propeller clean through a dock or jammin' her into her next-door neighbor fer keeps, don't you say us tug folks are Johnnie Raws. Just say we're worked and worked till we sleep at the wheel. For that's God's truth, sir."
